MLB Post Season Picture

As the MLB regular season is getting closer to its end, it is time to check out what the playoffs might look like. First, we should talk about the division leaders. In the AL East, it looks like the Toronto Bluejays, who started out the season out a little shaky, but went on a great run with Troy Tulowitzki and David Price, are going to be champions of the AL East. In the AL Central, the Kansas City Royals have blown out the Minnesota Twins. And in the AL West, the a Texas Rangers are holding on to a small lead, but they hope it will last. In the AL Wild Card, the New York Yankees would be the host team against the Houston Astros, but it might be the Texas Rangers. In the AL East, the New York Mets hope that they can keep up their work and stay ahead of the Washington Nationals. In the NL Central, the best team in the majors, the St. Louis Cardinals, are ahead of the Pittsburgh Pirates and Chicago Cubs. And in the NL West, the Los Angeles Dodgers have a good lead over the San Fransisco Giants. In the NL Wild Card, the Pittsburgh Pirates would be hosting the Chicago Cubs.

NFL Week 1 Review

Last week was the first week in the NFL! The first game on September 10 was the Patriots vs. the Steelers, in which the Patriots looked like the winners from the beginning, with Gronk and Brady, and they won by 7, 21-28. The best 2 Sunday day games were the Seahawks and the Rams and the Titans and the Buccaneers. First, the Seahawks and Rams. The Rams had a lead going into the 4th, but they lost it after 2 touchdowns and a field goal, but with 53 seconds left, the Rams scored a touchdown, bringing the game into overtime. Quickly, the Rams were able to get a field goal, which was the game winning field goal. In the Titans-Buccaneers game, Marcus Mariota faced Jameis Winston again, as they did in college only a few months before. Mariota was the better quarterback, throwing 4 touchdowns in his first game, but Winston didn't do good in his first game, his first throw being an interception. On Sunday Night, the Giants played the Cowboys on the road, and there were many dropped passes and loose ball in that game, but most of them were on the Giants, and that cost them a lost in a very close game, 26-27. And on Monday night, it was the Eagles and Falcons and the Vikings and 49ers. In the Eagles-Falcons game, the Falcons ended the first quarter with a 3-0 lead, which turned into a 20-3 lead after the half, which almost was lost after the third, when the score was 20-17, but they were eventually able to win in a close game, 26-24. In the Vikings-49ers game, there was a blocked field goal by the Vikings and a missed field goal by the Vikings in back-to-back drives, which usually doesn't happen. But the rest of the game, the 49ers did better than the Vikings, pulling out a 3-20 victory.
